CHAPTER IX.

Up starts Jack Dawson, catching Molly by the arm and his joint stool by the leg, and stepping back a pace or two not to be taken in the flank he swings his stool ready to dash the brains out of the first that nears him, and I do likewise, making the same show of valor with my stool, but cutting a poor figure beside Dawson's mighty presence.

Seeing their fellow laid out for dead on the floor, with his book nose smashed most horribly into his face, the others had no stomach to meet the same fate, but with their Spanish cunning began to spread out that so they might attack us on all sides, and surely this had done our business but that Don Lopez, flinging himself before us with his knife raised high, cries out at the top of his voice, "Rekhab!"—a word of their own language, I am told, taken from the Moorish, and signifying that whosoever shall outrage the laws of hospitality under his roof shall be his enemy to the death. And at this word every man stood still as if by enchantment and let fall his weapon. Then in the same high voice he gives them a harangue, showing them that Dawson was in the right to avenge an insult offered his daughter, and the other justly served for his offense to us. "For his offense to me as the host of these strangers," adds he, "Joso shall answer to me hereafter if he live. If he be dead, his body shall be flung to the vultures of the gorge, and his name be never uttered again beneath this roof."

"I bear no grudges, not I," says Dawson, when Don Sanchez gave him the English of this. "If he live, let his nose be set, and if dead let him be buried decently in a churchyard. But hark ye, senor, lest we fall out again and come out worse the next bout, do pray ask his worship if we may not be accommodated with a guide to take us on our way at once. We have yet two hours of daylight before us, there's not a cloud in the sky, and with such a moon as we had the night before last we may get on well enough."

Poor Moll, who was all of a shake with the terror of another catastrophe, added her prayers to Dawson's, and Don Sanchez, with a profusion of civilities, laid the proposal before Don Lopez, who, though professing the utmost regret to lose us so soon, consented to gratify our wish, adding that his mules were so well accustomed to the road that they could make the journey as well in the dark as in broad day.

"Well, then," says Dawson, when this was told us, "let us settle the business at once and be off."

And now, when Don Sanchez proposed to pay for the service of our guides, it was curious to see how every rascal at the table craned forward to watch the upshot. Don Lopez makes a pretense of leaving the payment to Don Sanchez's generosity, and he, not behindhand in courtesy, lugs out his purse and begs the other to pay himself, whereupon, with more apologies, Don Lopez empties the money on the table and carefully counts it, and there being but about a score of goldpieces and some silver he shakes his head, and says a few words to Don Sanchez in a very reproachful tone of remonstrance, to which our don replies by turning all the trifles out of his pocket, one after the other, to prove that he has no money.

"I thought as much," growls Jack in my ear. "A pretty nest of hornets we've fallen into."

The company, seeing there was no more to be got out of Don Sanchez, began to murmur and scowl eyes at us, whereupon Dawson, seeing how the land lay, stands up and empties his pockets on the table, and I likewise, but betwixt us there was no more than some French pennies and some odds and ends of no value at all. Fetching a deep sigh, Don Lopez takes all these possessions into a heap before him, and tells Don Sanchez that he cannot believe persons of our quality could travel with so little; that he feels convinced Don Sanchez must have dropped a purse on the way, and that until it is found he can on no account allow us to leave the neighborhood.

"This comes of being so mighty fine!" says Dawson, when Don Sanchez had explained matters. "Had we traveled as became our condition, this brigand would never have ensnared us higher. And if they won't believe your story, senor, I can't blame 'em, for I would have sworn you had £1,000 to your hand."

"Do you reproach me for my generosity?" asks the don.

"Nay, master, I love you for being free with your money while you have it, but 'tis a queer kind of generosity to bring us into these parts with no means of taking us back again. However, we'll say no more about that if we get out of this cursed smoke hole, and as we are like to come off ill if these Jack thieves keep us here a week or so and get nothing by it, 'twill be best to tell 'em the honest truth and acquaint them that we are no gentle folk, but only three poor English mountebanks brought hither on a wild goose chase."

This was a bitter pill for Don Sanchez to swallow. However, seeing no other cure for our ills, he gulped it down with the best face he could put on it. But from the mockery and laughter of all who heard him 'twas plain to see they would not believe a word of his story.

"What would you have me do now?" asks the don, turning to us when the clamor had subsided, and he told us how he had tried to persuade them we were dancers he was taking for a show to the fair at Barcelona, which they, by our looks, would not believe, and especially that a man of such build as Jack Dawson could foot it, even to please such heavy people as the English.

"What," cries Jack, "I can't dance! We will pretty soon put them to another complexion if they do but give us space and a fair trial. You can strum a guitar, Kit, for I've heard you. And Moll, my chick, do you dash the tears from your cheek and pluck up courage to show these Portugals what the English lass can do."

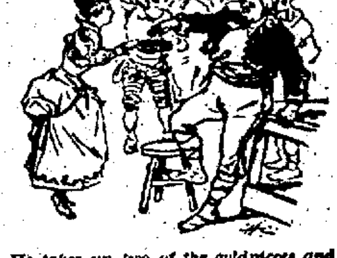
The brigands agreeing to this trial, the table is shoved back to give us a space in the best light, and our judges seating themselves conveniently Moll browses her eyes (to a little murmur of sympathy, as I thought), and I strike out the tune. Jack, with all the magnificence of a king, takes her hand and leads her out to a French pavan, and sure no one in the world ever stepped it more gracefully than our poor little Moll (now put upon her mettle), nor more lightly than Dawson, so that every rascal in our audience was won to admiration, clapping hands and shouting "Hola!" when it was done. And this warming us we gave 'em next an Italian coranto, and after that an English pillow dance, and in good faith had they all been our dearest friends these dirty fellows could not have gone more mad with delight. And then, Moll and her father sitting down to fetch their breath, a dispute arose among the brigands which we were at a loss to understand until Don Sanchez explained that a certain number would have it we were real dancers, but that another party, with Don Lopez, maintained there were but court dancers, which only proved the more we were of high quality to be thus accomplished.

"We'll convince 'em yet, Moll, with a fix of their doubts," cries Dawson, starting to his feet again. "Tell 'em we will give 'em a stage dance of a nymph and a wild man, senor, with an excuse for our having no costume but this. Play us our pastoral, Kit. And sing you your ditty of 'Broken Heart,' Moll, in the right place, that I may get my wind for the last caper."

Moll nods, and with ready wit takes the comb from her head, letting her pretty hair tumble all about her shoulders, and then, whipping up her long skirt, tucks one end under her girdle, thereby making a very dainty show of pink lining against the dark stuff and also giving more play for her feet. And so thus they dance their pastoral, Don Sanchez taking a tambourine and tapping it lightly to the measure, up to Moll's song, which so ravished these hardy, stony men by the pathetic sweetness of her voice—for they could understand nothing save by her expression—that they would have the dance go on until she had sung it through again. To conclude, Jack springs up as one enamored to madness and flings out his last steps with such vigor and agility as to quite astound all.

And now the show being ended, and not one but is a-crying of "Hola!" and "Brava!" Moll snatches the tambourine from Don Sanchez's hand, and stepping before Don Lopez drops him a courtesy and offers it for her reward. At this Don Lopez, glancing at the money on the table by his side, and looking round for sanction to his company, which they did give him without one voice of opposition, he takes up two of the goldpieces and drops them on the parchment. Thus did our Moll, by one clever hit, draw an acknowledgment from them that we were indeed no fine folks, but mere players, which point they might have doubted in their cooler moments.

But we were not quit yet, for on Don Sanchez's begging that we should now be set upon our road to Ravellos the other replies that, though he will do us this service with great pleasure, yet he cannot permit us to encounter the danger again of being taken for persons of quality. "Fine dress," says he, "may be necessary to the senor and his daughter for their court dances, and they are heartily welcome to them for the pleasure they have given us, but for you and the musician who plays but indifferent well, meaner garb is more suitable, and so you will be good enough to step up stairs, the pair of you, and change your clothing for such as we can furnish from our store."



He takes up two of the goldpieces and drops them on the parchment.

And up stairs we were forced to go, and thus being stripped we were given such dirty fine rags and so grotesque that when we came down Jack Dawson and Moll fell a-laughing at us, as though they would burst, and in truth we made a most ludicrous spectacle, especially the don, whom hitherto we had seen only in the neatest and most noble of clothes, looking more like a couple of scarecrows than living men.

Don Sanchez neither smiled nor frowned at this treatment, taking this misfortune with the resignation of a philosopher, only to quiet Dawson's merriment he told him that in the clothes taken from him was sewed up a bond for £200, but whether this was true or not I cannot tell.

And now, to bring an end to this adventure, we were taken down the intricate passes of the mountain in the moonlight, as many of the gang as could find mules coming with us for escort, and brought at last to the main road, where we were left with naught but what we stood in (save Moll's two pieces), and robbers bidding us their adios with all the courtesy imaginable. But even then, robbed of all he had even to the clothes off his back, Don Sanchez's pride was unshaken, for he bade us note that the very thieves in Spain were gentlemen.

As we trudged along the road toward Ravellos, we fell debating on our case, as what we should do next, etc., Don Sanchez promising that we should have redress for our ill treatment; that his name alone would procure us a supply of money for our requirements, etc., to my great content. Dawson was of another mind.

"As for seeking redress," says he, "I would as soon kick at a hive for being stung by a bee, and the wisest course when you've been once bit by a dog is to keep out of his way for the future. With respect of getting money by your honor's name, you may do as you please, and so may you, Kit, if you're so minded. But for my part, henceforth I'll pretend to be no better than I am, and the first suit of rags I can get will I wear in the fashion of this country. And so shall you, Moll, my dear. So make up your mind to lay aside your fine airs and hold up your nose no longer as if you were too good for your father."

"Why, surely, Jack," says I, "you would not quit us and go from your bargain!"

"Not I, and you should know me well enough, Kit, to have no doubt on that score. But 'tis no part of our bargain that we should bustle anybody but Simon the steward."

"We have 400 miles to go ere we reach Elche," says Don Sanchez. "Can you tell me how we are to get there without money?"

"Aye, that I can, and I warrant my plan as good as your honor's. How many tens are there in 400, Kit?"

"Forty."

"Well, we can walk ten miles a day on level ground, and so may do this journey in six weeks or thereabouts, which is no such great matter, seeing we are not to be back in England afore next year. We can buy a guitar and a tabor out of Moll's pieces. With these we can give a show wherever we stay for the night, and if honest men do but pay us half as much as the thieves of this country we may fare pretty well."

"I confess," says Don Sanchez, "your scheme is the best, and I would myself have proposed it but that I can do so little for my share."

"Why, what odds does that make, senor?" cries Jack. "You gave us of the best while you had aught to give, and 'tis but fair we should do the same. Besides which, how could we get along without you for a spokesman, and I marked that you drummed to our dance very tunefully. Come, 'tis a bargain, friend!"

And on Don Sanchez's consenting Jack would have us all shake hands on it for a sign of faith and good fellowship. Then, perceiving that we were arrived at the outskirts of the town, we ended our discussion.

CHAPTER X.

We turned into the first posada we came to—a poor, mean sort of an inn and general shop, to be sure, but we were in no condition to cavil about trifles, being fagged out with our journey and the adventures of the day and only too happy to find a house of entertainment still open. So, after a dish of sausages, with very good wine, we to our beds and an end, to the torment of fear I had endured from the moment I changed my French habit for Spanish rags.

The next morning, when we had eaten a meal of goats' milk and bread and paid our reckoning, which amounted to a few rials and no more, Don Sanchez and I, taking what remained of Moll's two pieces, went forth into the town, and there bought two plain suits of clothes for ourselves in the mode of the country, and, according to his desire, another of the same cut for Dawson, together with a little jacket and skirt for Moll. And these expenditures left us but just enough to buy a good guitar and a tambourine. Indeed we should not have got them at all but that Don Sanchez higgled and bargained like any Jew, which he could do with a very good face now that he was dressed so beggarly. Then back to our posada, where in our room Jack and I were mighty merry in putting on our new clothes, but going below we find Moll still dressed in her finery and sulking before her skirt and jacket, which she would not put on by any persuasion until her father fell into a passion of anger. And the sight of him fuming in a short jacket barely covering his loins, and a pair of breeches so tight that the seams would scarce hold together, so tickled her sense of humor that she fell into a long fit of laughter; and this ending her sulks she went up stairs with a good grace and returned in her hated skirt, carrying her fine dress in a bundle. But I never yet knew the time when this sly baggage would not please herself for all her seeming yielding to others, and we were yet to have more pain from her than she from us in respect of that skirt. For ere we had got way through the town she, dawdling behind to look first into this shop and then into that, gave us the slip, so that we were the best part of an hour hunting the streets up and down in the utmost anxiety. Then as we were swearing with our exercise and trouble, lo! she steps out of a shop as calm as you please in a skirt and jacket of her own fancy, and ten times more handsome than our purchase, a red shawl tied about her waist, and a little round hat with a bright red bob in it set on one side of her head, and all as smart as a carrot.

"Ha," says she, "where have you been hiding all this time?"

And we, betwixt joy at finding her and anger at her impudence, could say nothing, and yet we were fain to admire her audacity too. But how, not knowing one word of the language, she had made her wants known was a mystery, and how she had obtained this finery was another, seeing that we had spent all there was of her two pieces. Certainly she had not changed her French gown and things for them, for there, in a curious bundle, had her father been carrying up and down.

"If you han't stole 'em," says Dawson, finding his tongue at last, "where did you find the money to pay for these trappings, minx?"

"In my pocket, sir," says she, with a courtesy, "where you might have found yours had you not emptied it so readily for the robbers yesterday, and I fancy," adds she shyly, "I may still find some left to offer you a dinner at midday if you will accept it."

This hint disposed us to make light of our grievance against her, and we went on to Ravellos very well satisfied to know that our next meal depended not solely upon chance, and this, together with the bright sunlight and the sweet invigorating morning air, did beget in us a spirit of happy carelessness in keeping with the smiling gay aspect of the country about us.

It was strange to see how easily Moll fell into our happy go lucky humor, she who had been as stately as any Roman queen in her long gown being now, in her short colored skirt, as frolicsome and familiar as a country wench at a fair, but indeed she was a born actress and could accommodate herself as well to one condition as another with the mere change of clothes. But I think this state was more to her real taste than the other, as putting no restraint upon her impulses and giving free play to her healthy, exuberant mirth.

Her very step was a kind of dance, and she must needs fall a-caroling of songs like a lark when it flies. Then she would have us rehearse our old songs to our new music. So, slinging my guitar in front of me, I put it in tune, and Jack ties his bundle to his back that he may try his hand at the tambourine. And so we march along singing and playing as if to a feast, and stopping only to laugh prodigiously when one or other fell out of tune—the most mad, light hearted fools in the world—but I speak not of Don Sanchez, who, feel what he might, never relaxed his high bearing or unbent his serious countenance.

One thing I remember of him on this journey. Having gone about five miles, we sat us down on a bridge to rest awhile, and there the don left us to go a little way up the course of the stream that flowed beneath, and he came back with a posy of sweet jonquils set off with a delicate kind of fern very graceful, and this he presents to Moll with a gracious little speech, which set, it seemed to me, was to let her know that he respected her still as a young gentlewoman in spite of her short skirt, and she was not dull to the compliment either, for, after the first cry of delight at seeing these natural, dainty flowers, she, loving such things beyond anything else in the world, she [illegible] to make him a courtesy and [illegible] to his speech with another as gracious and well turned, as she set them in her waist scarf. Also I remember on this road we saw oranges and lemons growing for the first time, but full a [illegible] after Moll had first caught their wondrous perfume in the air. And these trees, which are about the size of a small tree, grow in close groves on either side of the road, with no manner of fence to protect them, so that any one is free to pluck what he may without let, so plentiful are they, and curious to see how fruit and blossoms grow together on the same bush, the lemons, as I know, giving four crops in the year, and [illegible] fall and [illegible] they may be bought in England at six [illegible].

We got a dinner of bread and [illegible] (very high) at a roadside house and glad to have that, only no meat of any kind, but excellent good wine, with dried figs and walnuts, which is the natural food of this country, where one may go a week without touching flesh and yet feel as strong and hearty at the end, and here, very merry, Jack, in his pertinacious, stubborn spirit declaring he would drink his wine in the custom of the country or none at all, and so squirting it all over his face, down his new clothes and everywhere but into his mouth before he could come to do it like Don Sanchez, but, getting into the trick of it, he so mighty proud of his achievement that he must drink pot after pot until he got as drunk as any lord. So after that, finding a retired place—it being midday and prodigious hot, though only now in mid April—we lay down under the orange trees and slept a long hour, to our great refreshment. Dawson, on waking, remembered nothing of his being drunk, and being not a penny the worse for it. And soon another long stretch through sweet country, with here and there a glimpse of the Mediterranean in the distance of a surpassing blueness, before we reached another town, and that on the top of a high hill. But it seems that all the towns in these parts (save those armed with fortresses) are thus built for security against the pirates, who ravage the seaboard of this continent incessantly from end to end, and for this reason the roads leading up to the town are made very narrow, tortuous and difficult, with watch towers in places, and many points where a few armed men lying in ambush could overwhelm an enemy ten times as strong. The towns themselves are fortified with gates, the streets extremely narrow and crooked, and the houses massed all together, with secret passages one to another, and a network of little alleys leading whither only the inhabitants know, so that if an enemy got into them 'twas ten to one he would never get out alive.

Here Jack and his [illegible] gave a show of dancing, [illegible] in their Spanish suits, which were vastly admired, and after in their Spanish clothes, but they then were asked to dance a fandango, which they could not. However, we fared very well, getting the value of 16 shillings in little moneys, and the housekeeper would take nothing for our entertainment, because of the custom we had brought his house, which we considered very handsome on his part.

DRAWING UP WILLS.

Lawyers Do Not Want Their Names Associated With the Documents.

That it takes a smart man to draw a will is an adage the respect for which in the legal fraternity is evidenced by the fact that few lawyers want to furnish visible evidence of their part in drawing up wills. It is perfectly easy for a man to hire a lawyer to draft his testament, of course, no matter how complicated its provisions may be. It is quite another thing to get the lawyer to witness it. He will not even allow clerks in his office to do so except perhaps where the client is an old or regular one. He wants him to go elsewhere to get the necessary attestations. There are exceptions to this unwritten rule, it is true, but it is pretty generally observed.

"Lawyers will not so admit it," said one of them, "but the true reason is they don't care to be identified with the instrument. It is about as difficult an undertaking as a lawyer can face to draw up a will where the bequests are surrounded with conditions that will close up all loopholes to a contest. Most testators know how they want to dispose of their estates, but it is exceedingly hard to express their wishes in a way that will leave no doubt when subsequently disappointed heirs call it into question. The books teem with instances of the inability of smart men, some of them distinguished lawyers, to make a will that will stand under a stiff fight. Lawyers naturally don't want to be associated with a document that may be pronounced bad, and so they are unwilling to sign as witnesses or to let their employees do it. I suppose it to some extent argues a lack of confidence in their work. Anyhow the precaution is of little use, for invariably the lawyer who drew it is disclosed in any litigation over a will."—Chicago Tribune.

One for the Prince.

The Prince of Wales once visited a seaside town for the purpose of laying the foundation stone of the new harbor. The prince, in company with Lord Dufferin, drove through the town preceded by the mayor in his official robes. An old fishwife, failing to distinguish H. R. H. among the other gentlemen, exclaimed:

"I wonder which is the prince?" and then cried out, at the top of her voice, "Long live the prince!"

Instantly the prince turned and bowed.

"Is that him?" she inquired, with a disappointed air.

"Of course it is," answered a neighbor.

"Well, well," she replied. "That's a regular knockdown! Well, if our mayor don't beat him all to fits in dress!"—Liverpool Mercury.

A Successful Answer.

One day, when the late Lord Beaconsfield was walking in his grounds at Hughenden Manor, he was accosted by a well known character noted for his ready wit. It being winter time and the weather unusually severe, the villager after paying his respects to his lordship commenced to make an appeal for a little help.

"How often have I told you to be careful and prepare for a rainy day?"

"Ah, that's right enough. So I did, my lord," said the ready witted villager, "but then who ever thought of seeing all this snow and hard frost?"

This ready retort had the desired effect.—Household Words.

"COIN'S Financial School" is evidently taking a vacation.

CLEVELAND could at least have sent a substitute to Chatanooga to represent the nation.

SNOW fell to the depth of twelve inches in Colorado last Saturday night, while here at home we were sweltering with the mercury at 85 degrees. Great country this.

IN the international athletic contest, held on the Manhattan field last Saturday, the American team defeated England's aristocratic athletes in every one of the eleven contests.

THE money plank in the platform of the Republicans of New York State has the true ring, and will meet the hearty approval of every true American.

AT the coming November election there will be seven Superior Court judges to elect. Each elector can only vote for six as the act provides for one minority member of that body. Hence there will be six Republicans and one Democrat comprising the Superior Court.

THE fiscal year ending June 30, 1894 under the McKinley tariff 63,-435,655 bushels of corn were exported. The year ending June 30, 1895 under the Wilson-Gorman bill, the export of corn was 25,507,753 bushels. Comment is unnecessary as to how we are capturing the markets of the world.

THE island of Cuba has made many efforts for a separation from Spain heretofore, but always without success. This last war for independence seems to be carried on with a more determined spirit than ever before, and it is dollars to buttons that the little island succeeds in severing the ties that hold her in subjugation to the rotten government of old Spain. Cuba, for centuries has furnished Spain the best of all that the island contained and she is deserving of independence and should obtain it.

THREE important national events have recently occurred, to wit: The grand army re-union of Louisville, the dedication of the Chickamauga battlefield as a national park and the opening of the Cotton States Exposition at Atlanta, either or all of which it would have seemed proper for the Chief Executive of this great nation to have attended. But, like a clam, he shuts himself up at Gray Gables and entirely ignores these great fraternal gatherings that are doing so much to heal up the differences that have existed between the North and the South. The people of the sunny South would have felt better to have seen the President among its hundreds of thousands of visitors. Perhaps his cyclopedia speeches had run out and he did not feel equal to the emergency of coming in contact with the brilliant orators of the nation and thus suffer by comparison.

HARPER'S Weekly of last week gives a very lengthy article on one of the greatest engineering projects of the 19th century. The scheme on foot is to connect the great lakes with the Atlantic at New York. "Following up the Hudson river as far as Waterford, above Troy, it will be necessary to construct a lock of 98 feet. This will raise the vessels to a sufficient elevation to carry them into Lake Champlain." When the head of the lake is reached a canal will be built to intersect with the St. Lawrence river some distance above Montreal. There will be two locks used on the St. Lawrence river, which will carry the vessels into Lake Ontario, and two more locks between Lake Ontario and Erie. Chauncey R. Dutton, a young man of Pittsburg, has invented and patented a pneumatic balance lock, which will entirely revolutionize canal building, this lock being so cheaply constructed and so easily managed that it has virtually overcome the drawback (the great expense) which has hitherto prevented the outlet to the ocean from the great lakes to New York.

IN last Sunday's Buffalo Express Senator Brice, of Ohio, gives his views of Grover Cleveland. He says: "I think he is by and large the greatest statesman and party leader of his time. He is one of the best Presidents we have ever had and he has made a great administration. He has placed the Democratic party on a high plane and his Democracy, his honesty and his integrity are unsurpassed in the history of our chief executives." Evidently the Senator from Ohio, who lives in New York, has not been following very closely the comments of the Democratic press on the "consecrated knight of free trade." The comments made by the Democratic press about the President during the heated discussion in Congress at the passage of the Wilson-Gorman bill is as yet too firmly fixed in the minds of the people at large to be easily forgotten. After the bill reached the President's hands he lacked the necessary back bone to either sign or veto the odious measure. Then the same newspapers claimed that he was a president without a party. By the tone of the Democratic press at that time, a person was naturally led to infer that Cleveland was not measuring up to the expectation of his followers. What Cleveland has accomplished since that time to retrieve his lost position is beyond discovery. Senator Brice is wilfully forgetful of the past, or else he wishes to mislead the people at the present time. The idea of his saying that Cleveland "is one of the best Presidents we ever had," is too preposterous for belief. His comparing him to Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Grant or Garfield is like comparing the bright sunlight of Heaven to a dark and cloudy night.

AN OBJECT LESSON FOR FARMERS.

A prominent farmer from western New York has been spending a few days with me in this city. Four years ago he was an uncompromising free trade Democrat. I told him at that time that if the country should be so unfortunate as to elect a President and Congress in favor of a low tariff or free trade, he would get an object lesson that would convince him of the injurious effects of such a policy, especially upon farmers. During the past two years this gentleman has had the object lesson and it has made of him a good Republican. He informs me now that he has voted his last Democratic ticket.

He says that in 1892 he had a flock of about 165 sheep, which were worth from $3 to $3 50 a head. He sold his wool at that time for from 35 to 45 cents a pound, depending upon the grade. Since the election of Cleveland the price of both wool and sheep has gradually gone down until now his wool is in a store house in Philadelphia and 15 cents is the highest price offered for the best grades, while he has just sold the poorest of it for 13 cents a pound. Three years ago the dogs in the town where he lived killed about 50 of his sheep and the town paid him $3 a head for those destroyed. This summer he has sold quite a large number of sheep at 50 cents a head. He sold the pick out of his flock for $1 50 to $1 70 a head, a year and a half ago. He has now reduced his flock to 40 sheep and would like to dispose of these if he could get any decent price for them.

Three years ago he sold spring lambs at from $4 to $6 a head, and this season has sold the very best for $1 25 a head. He said: "It is very true that I can buy a suit of clothes cheaper now than I could three years ago, but if I could get the price for wool and sheep that I got at that time I would be willing to pay two or three times as much for a suit of clothes rather than to buy them at present prices.

He does not attribute the depreciation in prices of farm products to the demonetizing of silver but to the lowering of duties and the destruction of confidence that has resulted from the election of Cleveland and the carrying out of the Democratic policy on the tariff question. He knows of hundreds of Democrats in his section who say they will never vote the Democratic ticket again. The town in which he lives for years gave a very large Democratic majority but last fall and the fall before it was carried by the Republicans, and last spring the Republicans had 100 majority in the town.

If all the farmers of the United States could realize the injury done their industry, by tariff tinkering, the country will be in a much better condition after the next Presidential campaign than it has been since Cleveland went to the White House in 1893.
E. P. M. in American Economist.

ONE FORTUNATE MANUFACTURER.

The New York World August 23 is kind enough to publish what purported to be a reply to one of the circulars issued by The American Protective Tariff League seeking information as to the employment of labor and its earnings at the present time. The reply was said to be as follows:

GENTLEMEN: In answer to your circular and cards, will say that we are paying the same price to the same amount of hands that we did in 1890—that is, in dollars and cents—and at the same time our hands are buying 10 per cent. more with the same money than they did in 1890.

We have all the Protection we want in free wool. For fear you will not tell the people what we say, we will send our answer to the World.
THE DOE RIVER WOOLEN MILLS.

The foregoing appeared in the American Economist of August 30. As the Free-Trade papers have been discussing this case for all its worth, we quote the following from the Boston Commercial Bulletin of September 7:

Reference to the directory shows that the Doe River "Woolen" Mills are located not in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania or Rhode Island, but in Tennessee, a State not especially remarkable as a center of wool manufacturing. The capital of the independent corporation is but $10,000. This capital suffices also for handling as well as selling the goods, for the mill has no selling agents in the great dry goods centers but sells direct to its customers. The mill is run by water power. It has but three sets of cards and no combs. Its leading product is Kentucky jeans and linseys.

If the Herald (Boston) will consult the dictionary it will find that these goods of the Doe River Woolen Mills are composed largely, if not chiefly, of cotton.

We do not for a moment suppose that either the New York World or the Boston Herald will ever publish it but we desire to draw attention to the fact that the Doe River "Woolen Mills," which "have all the Protection we (they) want in free wool," manufacture goods that "are composed largely, if not chiefly, of cotton." This will be interesting news to the buyers of these "woolen" goods.—American Economist.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

The Atlanta Exposition is the first to recognize the colored race by setting aside a building exclusively for exhibits of their skill and progress. This courtesy is emphasized by the fact that Atlanta is in a southern State and devoted to the interests of the cotton States. The negro exhibit surpasses the expections of the most enthusiastic and sanguine friends of the race. The chief of the negro department of the Exposition hopes that the progressive colored people of Pennsylvania will be willing to assist them by cash donations no matter how small each one may be to carry out a project, which the following extract from his letter fully explains:

"Our building (the colored building) is full of exhibits, but we are sadly in need of money. We want money to put an annex into our building for a lady's parlor, rest and reception room with hospital attached. We have $250 for the hospital but need about $250 more to erect a nice place and the ladies of Georgia will fix it up. In this way you can render us lasting help and we will name it for any name you may suggest that will show that Pennsylvania has contributed the money. I trust you will take hold of this at once and let me hear from you at once."

Any person interested in this matter and is willing to join in assisting what seems to be a modest request from this grand old Keystone State, $250, will please forward the same at the earliest possible date to

When will our American young ladies of great wealth take a lesson from the moth that flutters at and the flame? Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt will soon have a matrimonial halter thrown over her head, said halter will be gilded by an English title, known as the Duke of Marlborough. For the said gilding she will throw in our own bright young womanhood and a [illegible] of $10,000,000 to bolster up the English title. A year or two will pass by and an application for divorce will appear. It would seem that the many sad examples set before the bright young ladies of our land, of cruelty, desertion, &c., arising from wedding foreign titles, they would learn to let well enough alone, and take up with a common sense energetic American, but a hook baited with a foreign title catches them every time.

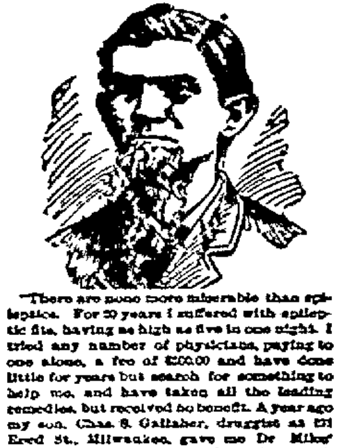
Epilepsy 20 Years.

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

A few years ago, Mr. L. W. Gallaher, was an extensive, successful export manufacturer of lumber products. Attacked with epilepsy, he was obliged to give up his business. The attacks came upon him most inopportunely. One time falling from a carriage, at another down stairs, and often in the street. Once he fell down a shaft in the mill, his injuries nearly proving fatal. Mr Gallaher writes from Milwaukee, Feb. 12, '95.



"There are none more miserable than epileptics. For 20 years I suffered with epileptic fits, having as high as five in one night. I tried any number of physicians, paying to one alone, a fee of $200.00 and have done little for years but search for something to help me, and have taken all the leading remedies, but received no benefit. A year ago my son, Chas. S. Gallaher, druggist at 621 Reed St., Milwaukee, gave me Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and I tried it with gratifying results. Have had but two fits since I began taking it. I am better now in every way than I have been in 20 years."

—John Bender, the barber who has his shop in the basement of the opera house, was arrested by officer Burlingame Wednesday on information of the old war horse, Pat McCabe charging Bender with selling beer without license and with robbing him (McCabe) of $5.00. When Bender was brought before 'Squire Knapp he waived a hearing and gave bail in the sum of $300 for the first offense and $200 for alleged robbery. Bender claims he is innocent, while McCabe is just as positive that he is guilty.

—B. F. Hazelton's mill, at Hazelhurst, burned at noon to-day. Fully insured. The mill caught fire while the hands were at dinner, and although the day watchman was on duty and promptly gave the alarm, the fire spread so rapidly that when the men arrived the inside of the mill was a seething mass of flames and the excellent fire apparatus with which the mill was furnished could not be reached. The mill had a capacity of 50,000 feet a day and will be rebuilt immediately. No lumber was burned. This is the first mill Mr. Hazelton has lost by fire.—Bradford Star of 20th inst.

—Attention is called to the appeal of Mrs. Louise W. Hall, of Harrisburg, who asks assistance of the colored people of Pennsylvania for the aid of their race at the Atlanta Exposition.

—Please come forward with subscriptions. It takes money to buy paregoric.—Potter Journal. No need of paregoric here, but subscriptions always come handy

It's just as easy to try One Minute Cough Cure as anything else. It's easier to cure a severe cough or cold with it. Let your next purchase for a cough be a One Minute Cough Cure. Better medicine; better results, better try it. A. W. Colegrove.

Tuesday, made up of nines from the Chautauqua House and Grand Central, with the proprietors acting as captains, was one of the most unique games played here this season. In order that the captains of the respective nines might see that their teams hustled for the victory Maj. Dan Bacon, of the Chautauqua, took his position as third baseman, and Col. Breneman filled the same position on his nine. Quite a fair-sized crowd had gathered to witness the game and the interesting features of the game were promptly given generous applause. The military bearing of the two principals was the cause of much merriment, as they marched around the bases and stood with protruding chests on third base. Of course the short stops of the respective nines were supposed to double short with third, and this afforded Messrs. Breneman and Bacon a better chance to watch the game and keep from being hit by the ball, and also an opportunity to laugh at the misfortunes of others.

Umpire Sheridan Gorton is deserving of special mention for the able manner in which he managed his part of the performance, especially when he was confronted by arguments which, under ordinary circumstances, meant fight, and we feel confident that his towering form was all that prevented him from a dose of Hickory. Below we append the score

Gone—But Not Forgotten.

At about 11 o'clock last Friday night Allen Wolcott went to the livery barn of A. T. Palmer and tried to get a rig to drive to Eldred, claiming that George Wolcott had been injured and he must go down at once. It seems his credit was not of the best at that establishment, and he was refused. Afterwards he went to Ed Daly and told the same story, and with better success, as Mr Daly furnished him a good rig. Before he started he treated the men in the barn twice liberally to fine cigars. It seems that Wolcott had tried to induce a young lady to go with him to Eldred and bring the horse back, but she refused. Wolcott started away about 12 o'clock at night. The next morning A. J. Warshofsky was somewhat surprised to discover that Allen did not show up at the beer bottling establishment, where he had been employed for some time. Mr Warshofsky being away about three days, Allen had had entire control of the bottling works, and when the books were examined it was found that he had taken in about $27.00 in that time, and there is no telling how much more.

It was also discovered Saturday morning that the cash register in the Grand Central sample room had been tampered with and about $12.00 taken therefrom. An examination of Wolcott's room revealed the fact that most of his wearing apparel was gone. Saturday night Mr Daly became somewhat suspicious and began to make inquiries, and soon discovered a good-sized "contraband in the wood pile." Sunday morning he received word from Olean that his rig was there Wolcott having arrived there about 7 a. m. Saturday and undoubtedly boarded one of the early trains out of Olean. When the facts are more fully known it will be discovered that there is a woman in the case.

Obituary.

The many friends of Mrs. J. P. Fitzpatrick, nee Rosalie Brooder were grieved to learn of her death which occurred at the home of her parents, Mr and Mrs Wm Brooder, Wednesday, Sept. 18, at 7:55 a. m.

Mrs. Fitzpatrick was born at Sartwell, Sept. 16, 1868, where she lived until April 7, 1891, when she married J. P. Fitzpatrick, of Elmira, at which place she lived until a few months ago, when she came to Sartwell with the hopes that her health might be restored. She was a much accomplished lady, having been teacher in the McKean county schools for seven years prior to her marriage. She was loved by all who knew her and her death will be mourned by a large circle of friends. Her life should be an example for many, she having never complained during her many months of illness, but was reconciled from the first to give up her earthly home to make her peace with her Heavenly Father.

Besides her husband and little daughter, she leaves her parents, four brothers, William, Thomas, Raymond and Joseph, and five sisters, Mary, Kate, Cecelia, Lucy and Ella, to mourn her death. Her funeral was held at St. Mary's church Friday, Sept. 20. Requiem high mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Driscoll. Her six uncles, Edd Brooder, John Brooder, Michael Brooder, Michael McAuliffe, John McAuliffe and John Ryan were her pall-bearers. Many relatives and friends attended the funeral.

The Oaks Win Another.

The Oaks made it three straight victories by defeating the Clermont champions at the latter place the first of the week. The Oaks put up a "crackajack" game, and made but three errors which were all excusable. Dave Davis of Mt. Jewett started in to do the twirling for Clermont, but was put on the shelf at the end of the fourth inning. Dave is a bigger success at the other "national game." The battery work of Servatius and Pierce was "hot stuff." Basse's work at second and the faultless playing of the Oaks' out-field were features. Score 10 to 3.

Dedication.

The Right Rev. Bishop Mullin, of Erie, assisted by Rev. Father Galligan and other priests, will dedicate the newly erected Catholic church at Clermont on Sunday Sept. 29th 1895.

An excursion train will leave Smethport at 8:33 in the morning for Clermont and return at 4 p. m. Fare for round trip 40 cents.

We are informed that first-class refreshments will be furnished for all who may attend.

Acts at once, never fails. One Minute Cough Cure. A remedy for asthma, and that feverish condition which accompanies a severe cold. The only harmless remedy that produces immediate results. A. W. Colegrove.

"A Summer Shower," as presented by Arthur Sidman and his company, is a comedy of great merit and well brought out, with all the essential parts in the best of hands. Mr. Sidman is a comedian who is not second to any in the quaint line in which he excels, and he is by no means the only comedian in the company.—Buffalo Express Aug 21 1894.

It is a truth in medicine that the smallest dose that performs a cure is the best. DeWitt's Little Early Risers are the smallest pills, will perform a cure, and are the best. A. W. Colegrove.

Death of an Old Resident.

Foster Downey died at the home of his son, B. T. Downey, Wednesday night, at the age of 85 years. The same day he was up around and outdoors as usual, in apparently good health, and his demise was simply a running down of the machinery. His death was easy and painless. Mr Downey was one of the earliest settlers in this county. His married life had reached almost 60 years, his helpmeet having died about a year ago. The funeral will be at 2 o'clock to-day at the house.

Electric Bitters.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any season but perhaps more generally needed when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alternative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, indigestion, constipation, dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. 50c and $1.00 per bottle at A. W. Colegrove's and A. B. Armstrong & Co.'s drug stores

At the Lyceum last evening an enthusiastic audience witnessed the charming little comedy "A Summer Shower." Since last it opened its doors the Lyceum has been fitted with a new stage and scenery and the large audience showed plainly its approval

"A Summer Shower" presents "Squire Haskins" in an altered form and Arthur C. Sidman fills the role of Lem Haskins admirably, continually calling forth peals of laughter from his hearers. During the entire play the Squire's antics are never tiring, except on the laughing arrangements of his auditors

As Cap. Tibbs, and also as John the valet Harry Otis gave cause much merriment. A beautiful summer shower comes in in the last act.—Buffalo Enquirer, Aug 21 1894

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract: "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr. King's New Discovery, as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife. While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rives Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding la grippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interruption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr King's New Discovery, it was quick in its work and highly satisfactory in its results." Trial bottles free at A. W. Colegrove's and A. B. Armstrong & Co's drug stores. ABOUT ELEPHANTS.

BELIEF THAT THEY ARE ENDOWED WITH SUPERIOR INTELLIGENCE

They Have Mental Qualities Not Possessed by Other Animals—Interesting Stories About Them—The First One Brought to This Country.

Elephants never go to sleep without leaving one of the herd awake to keep watch and give warning in case of intrusion. Go into the big menagerie tent of the show any night after the elephants have gone to sleep, or go into one of the elephant cars on a night run, and you will find that no matter how quietly and stealthily you have entered the eye of one member of the herd is upon you.

Conklin believes, as do most all elephant keepers, that the animal can understand what is said to it. Indeed trainers assert that it has more intelligence than any other animal and that it is the only one that can be taught to mind by word of mouth, without other cues. That it is endowed to a limited extent with reasoning powers is certain. One German philosopher thinks he has discovered that this mental development is due to the fact that in the trunk the elephant possesses a prehensile organ similar to the hand of man. The hand, he asserts, has played a more important part in the development of the human intellect than any other agency, since it brings its possessor into more intimate relations with the external world than any other organ. Some menagerie man, with more practical observation than the German professor and a smaller bump of theorizing, has pointed out that the only flaw in this reasoning is that if it is correct the gorillas and chimpanzees ought to have a higher mental development than man, because they have four good hands instead of two and any one of the four is stronger than the eight hands of four men.

Well authenticated stories of the sagacity of elephants are so numerous that it is never necessary to resort to exaggeration to say something interesting about them. In their wild state the leader of a herd has been seen when approaching swampy ground to extend one foot to try its solidity before trusting his weight to it. When satisfied of its firmness, he would go confidently on, and the whole herd would follow in single file, cautiously stepping in the footprints of the leader so that when the entire herd had thus passed the ground would look as if a single animal had gone that way. The same trait of caution is preserved in the domesticated animal. The action is not the result of training but a brute instinct always displayed and bearing a striking resemblance to reason.

When Jumbo tried to butt a fast freight off from the Grand Trunk tracks in an effort to save the baby of the Barnum herd Tom Thumb, and lost his life in the attempt, it was said that his action gave unmistakable evidence of reason, though it was poor testimony to his judgment that he so greatly underestimated the force of the locomotive.

In the matter of the food value of different materials the reasoning power of the elephant is very faulty, however. He will eat almost anything that comes his way. If a canvasman leaves a coat or vest hanging on a quarter pole within reach of an elephant the big brute will edge over toward it and watch an opportunity when unobserved to touch it with his trunk. Then he will begin to haul it toward him, putting in rolls of hay and chewing them between times. As soon as the garment is at his feet the elephant will put one of his ponderous five hoofed pedals on it and begin to tear it up, rolling the pieces in his trunk and stuffing them into his mouth. The sole of a shoe is just as good for him to chew on as a wisp of hay, and his natural instinct of mischief inclines him to prefer that which he knows is forbidden him.

The first elephant brought to America for exhibition purposes was Old Bet, and it has often been remarked that the American circus was built on her shoulders. Different accounts fail to agree in regard to the date of her importation, which is placed all the way from 1776 to 1838 by different writers of old time reminiscences. Old Bet was brought over in the ship America, of which Captain Crowninshield was master, and she landed, according to the harbor records, in Philadelphia in April, 1798. She was but 5 feet high, and the sum of $10,000 was paid for her, the largest price that had been paid up to that time for any animal either here or in Europe. She was first exhibited in Philadelphia and astonished the public daily by drawing the corks from 30 bottles of beer and drinking the contents. On the 20th of June, 1799, she passed through New York on the way to Boston.

Old Bet had been bought on the community plan by a number of farmers of Putnam county, N. Y., at the instance of one Ludwig Bistadler, each mortgaging his farm and putting $500 into the venture. They exhibited her under wagon sheds at hotels by putting a piece of side canvas up in front of the shed. The admission was 25 cents for adults and 12½ cents or a York shilling for children. This gigantic zoological institute, as the caravan was called, traveled east as far as Pawtucket, R. I., where the elephant, in spite of its docile disposition, was shot and killed. As the "institute" contained no other attractions the show closed. The same proprietors then imported a second elephant, which they also called Old Bet, and they enlarged their exhibition by adding to the collection a lion and a two horse cage and one monkey in a box strapped on to the hind end of the lion's cage. The second Old Bet landed in 1833. Following her to these shores the next pachyderm to arrive seems to have been Mogul, a very big fellow with long tusks, who was burned on the steamer Royal Tar between St. John's and Portland, Me.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

LOVE AND THE ECHO.

"Love me, love me," still he cried,
  "Ever love, forever!"
Cupid, laughing, turned aside.
Echo from the hill replied,
  "Never, never, never."

"Love me, for I love but thee,
  Ever, love, forever.
Heart to heart for thee and me."
Echo sighed, "It may not be,
  Never, never, never."

"Love me now in life and death,
  Ever, love, forever."
Sadly in an underbreath,
Sobbing Echo answereth,
  "Never, never, never."

"Love me, I shall worthy prove,
  Ever love, forever."
"Till a fairer face shall move!"
Mocking Echo answers. Lo ve!
  Never never never

"Love me," still the lover sings,
  "Ever love, forever."
Cupid plumes for flight his wings
As the last faint echo rings—
  Never never never.

—Clara H. St. George in Chicago Inter Ocean.

THE ELDER'S PRAYER

It Was Out of the Regular Order, but Proved Effective.

The Rev. H. D. Fisher could not resist the temptation to tell a story on a brother minister.

"It was Presiding Elder Still of the Methodist church. The good old man is dead now, and it can't do any harm to tell this story of him.

"The early traveling of the elder in Kansas was not easy. He had a mule on which he used to ride, and this mule was not always obedient. One day the elder and his mule encountered a swollen stream. Along the edge of the stream the elder and his mule strayed in hope of finding a safe crossing. Finally the elder found a tree that overhung the stream, and from which he believed he could swing to the other side. But the mule couldn't swing. He could swim, however, which the elder couldn't.

"All the extra clothing and the Bible were made into a bundle and tied on the mule's back and the animal led to the water. He swam safely across and began eating grass on the other side.

"The elder looked at the swinging limb and, dropping to his knees, prayed fervently that he might make no mistake in getting across. Then he swung out and landed safely.

"He knelt and thanked the Lord.

"But there was a new obstacle. The mule was having a good time in the grass and refused to be caught again. Several well directed efforts flew wide of the mark, and the good elder was in desperation. He must keep his appointment and he couldn't walk it. There was but one thing for the elder to do, and the elder did it. Down in the damp grass he dropped on his knees and prayed the Lord to help him catch the mule.

"This is the only instance I ever heard of in which a man called on the Lord to help him catch a mule, and to his dying day the elder firmly believed the Lord did it, though it took them both some time."—Topeka Journal.

Homers and Carrier Pigeons.

The homer and the carrier are both brilliant fliers, but the homer is the speedier bird and better fitted for long distances. The homer has the widest spread wings of all pigeons and can sail for an enormous distance through midair. It is also considerably lighter than the carrier and is possessed of more phenomenal powers of endurance, having been known to fly 500 miles without alighting. On a clear day with a good sky and fair calm wind 400 miles is an admirable record, although 500 miles a day is the goal of every pigeon flier's ambition. A bird that can perform this remarkable feat is worth at least $100 and may be valued at $500 if it is capable of a better record. The bird's gameness, stamina and speed reach their highest point of excellence at 3 and 4 years of age, which is the natural prime of life for a flier. After they have passed their prime they deteriorate in a scarcely noticeable degree and at 10 or 12 years of age are still good for the shorter distances.—Chicago Journal.

A New Restriction on Marriage.

A most ridiculous discussion arose the other evening at a [illegible] party. Conversation flagged slightly, and a wicked Yankee launched an apple of discord in the shape of the statement, now well known, that a bill was being framed in the house of [illegible] forbidding a man to marry his widow's cousin. A French lady made cutting remarks about the established church of England and its restrictions. A French colonel gallantly declared that the depopulation of France would prevent the French government from putting any such limitation on marriage, which was already difficult enough in this fair land. Sundry Americans rejoiced in a Pharisee-like manner over the absolute freedom of our own beloved country, as this was evidently not a case of the prohibited degrees, and finally the discussion bid fair to degenerate into a serious dispute when the author of this turmoil mildly suggested that as yet no man had after his death taken any interest in any of his widow's female relatives, which put a sudden end to the political theological debate then raging.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

PENNA. SALT MFG. CO.
Gen. Agts., Phila., Pa.

Many cases of so called heart disease, are only cases of acid fermentation in the stomach. The irritation from the acid hinders the action of the heart, through the pneumogastric nerve, and very often the excessive restraining power of this peculiarly acting nerve, becomes a very serious matter; the heart makes the greatest effort to do its work, but there is a shortness of breath which cannot be made up for, and the feeling throughout the chest is very distressing. Sometimes this acid arises and causes an acrid smarting in the throat, at other times the burning is up and down the chest.

Another stomach trouble is that form of dyspepsia which gives pain after eating. Persons with this disease seem to have but a scant measure of nerve strength; when food is being digested the stomach needs the concentration of all of the nerve and brain force, and if reading or close thought is attempted soon after eating, the stomach commences that intolerable aching which dyspeptics dread so much, when, the only immediate relief appears to be to stop the mental activity and get up and move around. In such cases there is evidently for the time being too little nerve power to divide between the stomach and the brain, each one alone needs it all to enable it to perform its labor.

There are two properties possessed by Dr. Day's Stomach and Nerve Tonic, which constitute it a cure for all of the above derangements. One is its power of purifying and sweetening the stomach and stopping the formation of gas and acid; the other is the giving of increased nerve action and strength. Soon, with better digestion and better nutrition, there is a general renewal of life and health. The mind of a business man, under its use, soon become clearer and more active; thoughts come easier and are more clearly expressed, the memory is stronger, business plans and ventures are arranged in a better manner and are more patiently and successfully carried out, and details are attended to better because of the increased strength of both mind and muscle.

Women having the care of a household on their minds find Dr. Day's Stomach and Nerve Tonic to be a great blessing; it gives better digestion, better nutrition, more strength, cures that feeling of weariness in the morning, that anxiety of mind, that fear that something is going wrong or that something bad is going to happen; cures dizziness, shortness of breath, pressure through the chest, belching of wind, rumbling in the bowels, heartburn, and all forms of dyspepsia that come from weakness.

Mrs. Ellen [illegible] of [illegible], Pa., writes: "I can truthfully say that I owe my life to your stomach and nerve tonic. I was troubled with my stomach for over a year and tried everything I could hear of, but did not get any benefit. I was nearly in despair, for although I had only four in my family, I could not begin to do the work for them. An aunt of mine wrote me to try Dr. Day's Stomach and Nerve Tonic and I did. I did not expect to ever get any better, but was greatly relieved on taking the first dose and now after taking only one bottle of your remedy I can do my work and my stomach does not hurt me only when I do very heavy work. I shall continue its use until I am entirely cured, for I am perfectly satisfied that it will cure all such as [illegible]. I think you dear Doctor a thousand times over for putting before the public so [illegible] wonderful remedy for human suffering."

Mrs. Albert Harman of [illegible] Fifth Ave., Altoona, Pa., writes: "Dr. Day's Stomach and Nerve Tonic has done me a power of good; that burning after meals has left me. I have always been so nervous that I would take nervous spells so bad sometimes that I would have to send for the doctor, but have not had one since I commenced using your stomach and nerve tonic."

H. C. Beaty, Barkeyville, Pa., says: "For years I had a severe pain in my stomach after meals; one bottle of Dr. Day's Stomach and Nerve Tonic cured me, I think permanently."

J. C. Fulton, of Burgettstown, Pa., writes: "I have been afflicted with the rheumatism and was laid up in bed a good part of the time; my stomach was in a bad condition and would not retain food. I began to use Dr. Day's Stomach and Nerve Tonic; it not only helped my stomach but relieved me of the rheumatism and also increased my weight wonderfully."

THE VEILED WARBLER.

A Street Singer That Puzzled the French Capital For Three Months.

Once, and once only, was it given to Paris to be puzzled by a street singer. The apparition only lasted three months but while it lasted it was most perplexing to us. One evening all the loungers on the boulevards who were sipping their beer or strangling a parrot, as the French phrase hath it to describe the process of imbibing a dose of that subtle poison absinth, were mildly bored by observing the approach of three street musicians. One man trundled a piano, a second carried a violin and a third, a tall slight woman in deep mourning, her crape veil sweeping over her face, took up her station between them. They paused and prepared for action, whereupon many people [illegible] ing the [illegible] of street music [illegible] to leave when to the utter amazement of all to the [illegible] [illegible] of a [illegible] [illegible] the night air an exquisitely [illegible] and very powerful female voice singing with a heartbreak in every note the wild wail of Traviata over her approaching death, "Gran Dio, morir si giovane."

Perhaps the voice gained by the surprise of the public, perhaps it was aided by the stillness of the sultry air, but certainly it sounded most divine. Then [illegible] of [illegible] both gold and silver rewarded the trio of fortune, but they never gave but two songs per evening, and then disappeared. The adventurous men who followed the supple grace of the woman's tall figure returned discomfited, scared away by the truculent aspect of her two companions.

During that whole summer the strange band would reappear every night and every night would reap a harvest, but when the summer departed they too vanished and never again reappeared. The Veiled Songstress, as she was called, came from the darkness and vanished into the night, and who she was or whence she vanished is a mystery. Of course the police knew, but the archives of the prefecture are sacred from the gaze of the profane, and as that is the [illegible] and as Paris forgets as speedily as she admires, we had the arithmetical puzzle [illegible] the lightning calculator to distract our attention that autumn in front of the cafe, so the Veiled Songstress sank out of sight and the waves of oblivion have closed over her now and forever.—Paris Letter.

"Bah! I know what her can"

"True, that is a secondary consideration. But is she very wise?"
